Marathi poems, children stories, short stories Chandamama In an ancient Indian epics Mahabharata, Chandamama (‘Mother Goddess’) is referred to as a love goddess. According to the legend, Chandamama and Lord Krishna were in love with each other. Once she wished to marry Lord Krishna, but he asked her to wait till he could fulfill her dream. On the other hand, a king named Bana, who was Chandamama’s father, was going to marry her off to King Pratapaswa of the Haihayas Kingdom. However, while on his way to the wedding, his horse’s shoe became loose. He told Chandamama that he would send her to marry the king, but had to return to mend the horse’s shoe first. He also added that the king’s wife mustn’t know about it. Chandamama then came to the king’s court and asked for a fair handmaiden. The king consented to the marriage and set out to his kingdom. Meanwhile, Chandamama and her father, Bana, had arrived at the bride’s court. They were greeted and welcomed by the bride and the king. The queen had a chamber for Chandamama made up of precious and valuable ornaments. She was also given a chamber for her father, and made up her mind that the king would be able to meet both of them. The next day, the king came to the chamber of the bride. Chandamama kept quiet, but her father was proud. The king was surprised to see Chandamama in the bride’s chamber. He asked his wife what she was doing in that chamber. The queen said that she had put the bride in that chamber and that she had seen no one. However, she did not explain the true reason for Chandamama’s presence in the chamber, and thus proved that she was keeping a secret. The king summoned Chandamama and asked her about her father’s circumstances. Chandamama replied that her father had put the horse’s shoe back on the horse’s foot and had returned home. The king was very angry and threatened to kill her father. This angered Chandamama even 82157476af
